References Category:Dassault Systèmes software Category:Computer-aided design software Category:Software using the GPL license We introduce a simple method to improve the phase stability of a 1:1 two-color two-axis micromirror for phase modulation. The method uses an extended electrostatic read-out mode to avoid phase jitter in the micromirror in an extended phase-shift range. The desired wavefront is then created by adding a third color to the phase modulation technique without using the actual micromirror. A 12-micrometer periodic triangular-shaped phase grating was used to realize the method. Theoretical results and simulation indicate that the technique ensures improved phase stability in the micromirror at a given range of phase-shifts. The disclosure of the present invention generally relates to the field of fiber optic waveguides and optical fibers, and more particularly, to a method for aligning a photonic crystal fiber (PCF) end face of a fiber bundle. As shown in FIG. 1, a conventional method for aligning a fiber bundle 10 is using the four points S, D, R, and L. As illustrated in FIG. 2, the method of alignment uses the intensity of the light emitted at S, D, R, and L and is based on a design principle of adjusting the photonic crystal fiber (PCF) of the fiber bundle to form a wavelength multiplexing optical fiber. However, in the case of a conventional method for aligning a fiber bundle 10, it is difficult to automatically adjust the position of the optical fiber, and in addition, the minimum
