The complete sequence of plasmid pNOK1000, a member of the streptomycin-resistance-resistance (Srr) family of plasmids. The complete nucleotide sequence of the plasmid pNOK1000 (Streptomyces griseus var. aburaviensis) was determined. pNOK1000 is a 26.4-kb plasmid that carries a resistance gene for streptomycin and aminoglycosides in addition to one which is not known. The nucleotide sequence contains five open reading frames (ORFs) (designated ORF1-ORF5), three of which are in the same orientation as the resistance gene. The ORF4 and ORF5 may encode proteins of a homology to the leaderless protein A from Escherichia coli and the two-component response regulator gene from Streptomyces coelicolor A3(2), respectively. The nucleotide sequence also includes two direct repeats, one of which is almost identical to that of pIP501 and the other is an isomer of the previously reported S. lividans plasmid pSLA2. Intracellular pH homeostasis in mouse, human, and rabbit spermatozoa. Extracellular pH of mouse, human, and rabbit spermatozoa, as well as the intracellular pH of mouse spermatozoa, was investigated using the fluorescent probe BCECF. Diamantine Diamantine is a rare tungsten metal with the formula  $W_2O_3$ . It is a yellow-green solid with a density of about 4.5 g/cm<sup>3</sup>. It is brittle. Diamantine was first discovered in 1836 by the Austrian chemist Moritz Hauf. It was named after the French chemist Victor de Diamant (1800–1883), and not after the city of Diamant, in Lorraine. It is a good lubricant and has a higher density than tungsten carbide.
