Locals said Ravi had no mental illness and was killed under political conspiracy. Highlights Man murdered at a village in Maharashtra's Maharashtra Locals suspect it to be a political conspiracy: Maharashtra Police Ravi alias Ravi Panchale died on Saturday afternoon The mystery that has accompanied the murder of a man in Maharashtra's Pune district has deepened. Police are looking into the possibility of a "political conspiracy" after the victim, Ravi Panchale, was found dead with his hands tied. The murder took place in Saoner village, about 90 km from Pune. Locals said Ravi, a local wine exporter, had no mental illness and was killed under political conspiracy. "He was our dear brother. We are shocked," Ravi's brother, Rajendra, told NDTV. The police said they were looking for two persons in connection with the murder. Ravi's mother, Dinala, who works as a labourer, told NDTV that her son's body was found in the yard of her home. It appears Ravi was killed with a sharp object, which has not been found yet. Ravi was a vegetable trader in Saoner. According to his friend, he came to the village a few years ago, to invest in the local wine industry. He was the only son of a farmer in the village. Ravi's son, Manish, who is a software engineer in Pune, said his father was a very "cool" and "harmless" person. He described him as "a model of perfect father". Manish said his father came to Pune from Saoner after a few years, but did not have the means to build a house for himself. He had
