Title: Review of a speech delivered by the presumptive Democratic nominee, Hillary Clinton.

This essay will review a speech delivered by the presumptive Democratic nominee, Hillary Clinton. It was given recently in New York City on Roosevelt Island. The purpose of her speech was to lay out for the listener her viewpoints and platform. That is the reason for giving campaign speeches purportedly, although it is possible to opine that the likely Republican candidate has had none of this to date. That is what makes this, and many of Hillary's speeches as a matter of fact, so promising. Indeed, she does not disabuse herself of a bit of Republican-bashing.

The aim of this paper is to conduct a rhetorical analysis of this particular speech. To determine if and how she used ethos, pathos, and logos to persuade and influence the listener. Also, what other language techniques may have been incorporated into the oration to drive home her points – such as figurative language, imagery, and humor.

If those who follow politics pull back the lens to view this speech against the oration that is being presented ad nauseum on the news channels, Hillary's expertise as a public speaker, and her command of rhetoric to speak to an audience from a position of authenticity, is even more evident. On the right we have a bully at the pulpit, whose inability to compose his thoughts and share his vision are all but buffoonish. When placed aside Hillary's eloquence there is no question who has the oratorical competency. It underscores the importance of public speaking, particularly in the political arena.
